¹The CCLS pre-registration process is conducted similar to a lottery and it is the primary way of selecting students for clinic enrollment. The pre-registration process is designed to give all students a fair chance for enrolling in their preferred clinical course.

There are no course or grade requirements for clinic enrollment. However, due to the confidential nature of the clinic’s work on behalf of the office’s clients, CCLS will solicit from the office of Academic Affairs a character clearance of each student who seeks to enroll in a CCLS clinic. Thus, as part of the pre-registration process, each student must disclose to the CCLS director or managing director information regarding whether the student is currently or ever has been on academic probation, the subject of any disciplinary action, or the subject of a criminal action or proceeding. Additionally, students with cases pending before the Law School Honor Board will not be cleared for enrollment in the clinic until the matter is resolved. A prior adverse disciplinary determination in college or law school could prevent a student from being approved for enrollment in the clinic.

Paul Kurth, the CCLS Managing Director, is available to speak with any students who have specific questions about how students’ past histories will affect their ability to participate in one of the clinics.
