Comparative and International Law Institute, the International Law Students Association and the Irish-American Law Students

PRESENT

A LECTURE BY

Liz Campbell, Ph.D.
School of Law at Aberdeen

Prosecuting Organized Crime:
The Terrorist Legacy

Monday, March 26, 2012
1:30-3:00 p.m.
Room 305
Columbus School of Law

Dr. Liz Campbell joined the School of Law at Aberdeen as a lecturer in 2007, after carrying out her doctoral research as a Government of Ireland scholar at University College Cork, Ireland. Her PhD looked at the reactions of the Irish state to the threat of organized crime, and sought to place these legal developments in a theoretical context. Dr. Campbell now researches in the broad area of criminal justice and procedure, with a particular interest in the legal responses to organized crime, DNA databases, and penal populism. In addition, she teaches criminal law, criminology and evidence at undergraduate and postgraduate levels.

Her recent publications have appeared in the British Journal of Criminology, Edinburgh Law Review, Juridical Review, Criminal Law Review, Legal Studies and International Journal of Evidence and Proof. She has also co-authored a textbook on Irish criminal law. She is a regular participant at national and international conferences, and has given guest lectures in Ireland and the UK. Dr. Campbell is currently carrying out a comparative doctrinal and penological assessment of DNA collection and retention. She has also recently been awarded a Fulbright fellowship to support her research on the legal reactions to organized crime in the UK and Ireland and is based at the University of Maryland for the academic year of 2011-12.